"The Centennial History of The Woodward School for Girls" was researched and written by Robert L. Johnston, Headmaster.

Oh Woodward Dear, Forever . .

Ebenezer Woodward was born in Cambridgeport, Massachusetts on March 12, 1798, while his parents were visiting relatives. His father was Ebenezer Woodward and his mother was Deliverance (Delia) Adams. The family returned to Hanover, New Hampshire where he graduated from Dartmouth College in 1817. Following his graduation he moved to Concord, Massachusetts where he studied medicine under Dr. Issac Hurd. From Concord he relocated to Boston where he studied medicine under the guidance of his uncle, Dr. Samuel Adams. He received his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1823. Dr. Woodward began his medical practice in Quincy, April 1, 1823. One of Quincy's prominent citizens, Colonel Thomas Greenleaf, was being treated by a leading Boston physician who held out no hope for Colonel Greenleaf. Dr. Woodward diagnosed, treated and eventually cured Thomas Greenleaf. On November 13, 1837, at the age of 39, Dr. Ebenezer Woodward married Mary Ann Wroe Greenleaf, the youngest daughter of Thomas and Mary Deming Greenleaf. Dr. Woodward's home was located on what is now the site of the Thomas Crane Public Library. In 1853, he and Mary built a home on Granite Street in West Quincy. This home still stands.

For about a half century Dr. Woodward served the medical needs of all his patients. He attended to the influential such as John Adams and Josiah Quincy. He also attended the powerless who remain nameless. Ebenezer Woodward died on May 21, 1869, nearly 125 years ago. His wife Mary died on January 23, 1870. The couple died childless. There were interred in the Greenleaf-Woodward tomb in the Hancock Cemetery.

It is assumed that Dr. Woodward was inspired by the former President, John Adams, his relative, friend and patient. Adams left his estate for the founding and maintenance of a classical school for boys. Dr. Woodward, in his 1869 will, established a trust fund for the purpose of founding a school for Quincy born girls. Both of these philanthropists talked in specific terms that overtly and covertly imaged these schools as college preparatory. Dr. Woodward, this writer believes, (without documentation), learned a great deal from the will of John Adams. Woodward died in 1869, 43 years after the death of John Adams. Adams Academy for Boys was still not built. Mary Ann Wroe Greenleaf Woodward, it was speculated, would not decide to donate her share of the estate to the same cause as her husband. In a front page article in the Quincy Patriot it was made clear that that was not the case and she was determined to follow in her husband's footsteps. The main provisions of the Woodward will were as follows:

- That the school should be established within 25 years of his decease.
- That the school shall be for the education of Quincy born girls only.
- That the fund should be managed by the town or city government.
- That the management of the school, so far as the selection of the instructors and the studies to be pursued and all the internal regulations, to be and to remain under the direction of the ordained and settled ministers of the town or city, Catholic as well as Protestant.
- The senior Pastor of The First Parish Church is to be the perpetual chairman of the said board or committee.
- That if the town of Quincy should refuse to accept the bequest upon terms specified, or fail to comply with the words or intent of the will, as determined by good judges, the property should be surrendered to Dartmouth College, for the promotion of science and literature.

Much of the intent of Dr. Woodward's and Mary Greenleaf Woodward's will has been altered by "good judges". Woodward is no longer just for Quincy born girls, the fund is no longer managed by the town or city government, the management of the school no longer remains under the direction of the settled clergy of Quincy and yet the fundamental intent of the will has been carried out. The 125 years since the deaths of Dr. and Mrs. Woodward have recorded great vision as well as mediocrity. The past is approved, the present must be accepted and the future is open. Let the immense journey begin!

Strong to Live 1894-1901

On April 10, 1894, The Woodward Institute opened its doors to 76 Quincy born students to be taught by seven teachers. The demands of Dr. Woodward's will that the school open within 25 years of his death were met-with 40 days to spare. The City of Quincy was called to task by the Attorney General and others as to the legality of the Board of Managers actions. The court determined, as it would continue to do over the years, that the dominant intent of Ebenezer Woodward was to establish a female institute, and this intent must prevail over any detail which interferes with it. The immense journey had begun.

Eva Phillips Boyd, who entered The Woodward Institute for Girls in 1894 and graduated in 1899, wrote: "How exciting was that opening day in September! How important we felt getting acquainted with girls from different parts of Quincy! How fresh and shiningly new it was! Wholly impressive and beautiful all its new wood and varnish and furniture! How delightful to have perfectly new school books and to own them! And most of all, how wonderful were the teachers." The course of study was carefully designed to reflect a broad liberal arts program oriented primarily, but not solely, toward preparation for higher education. Although sixth grade students attended the opening in April a sixth grade class was not admitted in the fall of 1894. In September of 1895, Woodward Institute opened its doors but this year not to seventh graders. The original staff was young, well trained and competent.

Frances Lance, a Wellesley graduate, taught English which included literature, grammar and composition. She later married an Italian correspondent, named Felice Ferrero. Mrs. Ferrero published her own poetry and translated her husbands literary works. The foreign languages were at once ancient and modern including Romance and Germanic. Latin and Greek were taught by Edith Wilder who graduated from Boston University. Mary Holmes taught six levels of German in order to provide students with a complete knowledge of grammar as well as the ability to speak and write the language correctly. Virginia Newcomb taught six levels of French. It has been alluded to that she later held an international position in education. This appears to be an incredible language package!

Algebra and geometry were required and taught by Sarah Lane from Radcliffe College. Miss Lane also taught medieval and modern history. The emphasis was not on new data but rather on historic principles. Maude E. Rice, a graduate of Bridgewater Normal School, taught British, Greek and Roman history. Miss Rice also taught music. Her goals were to cultivate a taste for good music and to train girls in music for the purpose of chorus work. "Quality of tone is sought rather than volume."

Charlotte Franklin, from Smith College, was the department of natural science. She taught physics, physiology, chemistry, botany, physiography, mineralogy, biology and astronomy. The general aim of the department, simply put, was to teach the scientific method, and Miss Franklin also dissected a cat to the horror of the students. There are few new things under the sun.

Charlotte Burgess came with the new principal from Plymouth. She taught typing, stenography, shorthand, dictation, bookkeeping, business practices, commercial arithmetic and telegraphy. "In all subjects accuracy, methodical habits and neatness were aimed for, rather than great speed and poor work." Helen Blackwell taught gymnastics. Eva Phillips Boyd recalls Miss Blackwell stating: "Stand up straight! There'll be plenty later to make you bend over."

And then there was Georgiana Cushing Lane. Her legendary dedication to Woodward kept her in the school's employ for over six decades. Miss Lane graduated from Boston Normal Art School and her conservative evaluative comment on student art was, "That's not bad". She wasn't either. In fact, she was great!

Carrie E. Small was just 29 when she assumed the position of Principal of The Woodward Institute. She received her education from Wellesley College and Boston University. Before coming to Woodward she was the Principal of Plymouth High School. This was an unusual role for a woman to fill in the last century.

After one year on the job she wrote, " . . . the work of the school speaks in no uncertain tone-in the improved carriage of the scholars, their increased ability to think for themselves, to grasp new conceptions, as well as in marked esprit de corps, which is so manifest a feature in the school." She continued: "Careless girls are becoming more careful; idle girls, more diligent; the indifferent are working up; the slow are making efforts for better work; the quick, intelligent girls are learning to have patience with their slower sisters." Although Miss Small eventually taught social science and math she began by teaching a course called "news of the day". This course encouraged reading, current events, expression, discussion and aimed at producing a "broader sympathy and wider intelligence". Helen Randall, a graduate from Woodward before 1900 wrote, " . . . more and more I realize what a wonderful, unusual school it was - and what a remarkable Principal we have in Miss Small, who was years ahead of her time. Her putting us on our honor in going to or coming from classes, her morning talks bringing us back to order when we needed it. Do you remember how she insisted upon our giving good attention to speakers, not to look around even if someone came in with squeaking boots?"

The first graduation ceremonies were held on the evening of June 17, 1896, at City Hall. Seven hundred people attended! And the number graduating? Seven graduated and five returned to Woodward the next fall for advanced work! The speaker was the President of Amherst College, Merrill E. Gates. His topic was "The New Education for Women, and the Old-time Graces."

The minute the six room schoolhouse opened it was too small. So during October, November and December of 1896 there was, " . . . constant noise of many workmen on the opposite side of a thin partition, of cold draughts, of dark study halls, of the lack of comfort generally." The Class of 1899 graduated 29 girls. This was considered the first entering class to experience the full benefits of a Woodward education. The Reverend Edward A. Robinson, Secretary of The Board of Directors wrote in 1896: "Woodward Institute, when weighed in the balance, even now, is not found wanting a year or two more and the school will prove its rights to its chosen motto, "Strong to Live."

Woodward - A Public High School? 1901-1926

The twentieth century brought significant, however not surprising, changes to The Woodward Institute. Carrie Small resigned to become the Principal of Acadia Seminary and later the Dean of Women at Colby College. Frederic W. Plummer, West Point graduate and popular Principal of the Murdock School of Winchendon, Massachusetts, was appointed the new Woodward Institute Principal. He was described by Quincy's Superintendent of Schools as a man who is, " . . . doing his work in a quiet, unassuming, dignified but effective manner." In addition he claimed that, " . . . he seems to inspire respect and confidence, awakens a spirit of order and industry and requires prompt and ladylike conduct." In defending the selection of a male principal, Frank E. Parlin declared: "The decision was not based upon the opinion that a man is superior to a woman, but that it is a serious mistake to educate girls wholly under the instruction of female teachers." The all male Board of Directors and the all male Board of Managers concurred.

The decision by the Board of Directors, (previously The Board of Instruction, later The Board of Supervisors and finally before its dissolution The Board of Supervisors Under the Will of Ebenezer Woodward) that changed the direction, thrust and focus of The Woodward Institute for the next quarter of a century was the appointment of Frank E. Parlin, Superintendent of The Quincy Public Schools, as the Superintendent of Woodward. This writer suspects, without documentation, that The Board of Directors was overwhelmed, frustrated and unclear as to what to do with this independent girls school. Furthermore, this author questions why a qualified and capable principal like Carrie Small resigned?

Superintendent Parlin over the eight years of his reign wrote lengthy reports to The Board of Directors including accounts of routine changes, reflections on the role of the school and heavy doses of the educational philosophy of the day. His evaluation of the school as he found it is as follows: "Our course is weak on the side of manual training. The introduction of domestic science, arts and economics would provide a kind of training of high educational value and of the greatest practical value to girls generally. To be able to direct the affairs of a household intelligently and economically, to make an attractive and happy home, is not beneath the ambition of any woman, the realm of her peculiar powers, the centre of her deepest interest must ever continue to be the home. Why then should not this fact be recognized in the education of our girls. Many of these girls on leaving school must depend upon their own efforts for a livelihood." Thus the table was set for major changes in the curriculum, style, philosophy and general orientation of The Woodward Institute for Girls.

The only required subjects at Woodward were English, physical training and music. A great deal of emphasis was placed on physical training. Physicals were given every fall and the aggregate results were published. This department was expanded by adding a series of courses on physical health and hygiene.

The new department of household sciences and arts was instituted in 1904 and 106 of the 155 students enrolled in the program. The seventh grade reappeared at the turn of the century but was eliminated a few years later. It was stated that they would be duplicating the work of the City's grammar schools. One hundred sixty four (164) students enrolled in 1903 and it was believed that this was the capacity of the school. A new flagpole as well as an electric clock system were installed. The old driveway and the gravel area south of the building were abolished and grassed over. A double tennis court was constructed and equipped. It was acknowledged that the laboratories and library had been neglected. In this report to the Board in 1905, Superintendent Parlin offered the following "apologies" for curriculum departments:

"Household sciences and arts encouraged students to become good homemakers and also developed a sense of orderliness.

Physical Training corrected defects and fortified students against ills likely to occur in later years.
Art ought to help students to appreciate the beautiful in thought and behavior."

In 1906, The Quincy Public Schools used The Woodward Institute building from 1:45 p.m. - 6:00 p.m. This meant that the students and teachers of Woodward were deprived of the use of their building during these hours. The decision was based on the "larger interests of the community". Many believed this justified the sacrifice.

The commercial department continued to thrive. Penmanship and business practice were added to the curriculum. There was a push at this time to award a certificate for girls taking the commercial course but who could not finish their education at Woodward due to economic pressures. This writer, without documentation, believes this became the practice.

In 1908, in his report to The Board of Directors, Superintendent Parlin wrote: "If the history of Woodward Institute proves anything, it proves that the school cannot be successfully run under the immediate direction of this Board. No important enterprise, certainly no school, can long continue to prosper under the direction of divided authority or under a fickle and indefinite policy." This statement obviously refers to the first seven years of the schools existence and at least hints at a difficult if not turbulent beginning which caused The Board of Directors to turn its authority over to the Superintendent of The Quincy Public Schools. Superintendent Parlin also indicated it could be as well run if handed over to the School Committee except that this action might endanger The Woodward Fund.

The fall of 1909 brought another Superintendent of The Quincy Public Schools who continued the tradition and become the Superintendent of The Woodward Institute for Girls. Superintendent Perley Barbour began his tenure by stating the following: "The school, as we know, is in effect a public high school, . . . ". He also suggested that some of the income of The Woodward Fund be set aside each year for future building needs of the school. He also proposed that sewing, dressmaking and millinery be added to the curriculum. Mr. Barbour also proposed a new room be established for instruction in cooking."

The same year the enrollment reached 178 in the fall and 27 students graduated in the spring. Frederic Plummer resigned as Principal and accepted the position of Principal of Chelsea High School. When Mr. Plummer arrived in 1901 there were only 88 students in a school that consisted of grades seven through twelve. He left nine years later and the school enrolled 178 students with only grades nine through twelve.

Horace W. Rice was appointed the new Principal. He left Natick High School after serving there for 12 years. He was a friend and colleague of Superintendent Barbour. He arrived on the scene with the largest freshman class and the largest enrollment to date in the school's history. He was a also to teach Latin and history.

There were several shifts with the arrival of Superintendent Barbour. Students elected their studies by course and not subjects. However, the courses were varied.

Household Science and Arts, Commercial, Modern Language, Normal and College

Physics was brought into greater visibility and the household science and arts course was newly organized and described as the "logical outgrowth of the present day demands in the education of girls". It was now believed that the capacity of Woodward was probably 200 students. However, in 1912, the enrollment soared to 211 with only 11 teachers. Thirty students graduated in 1912. Superintendent Barbour suggested that in a few years there would be a second high school in the City and perhaps Woodward Institute would discontinue its vocational work and strengthen it English and classical courses.

Barbour in a report to The Board of Directors took it upon himself to ask and answer an ageless question. The question of what Woodward has to offer me for an education?

1 - The opportunity to study in a school specialized for girls.
2 - Strong courses in preparation for college and normal school.
3 - Scholarly instruction.
4 - A fairly wide range of accepted secondary subjects.

What does The Woodward Institute demand of me?
1 - Faithful attendance.

2 - A more conscientious effort and a closer application than the public school would ask.
3 - The school is not obliged to keep the student with an indifferent attitude or low scholarship.

In the late teens the enrollment began to drop and some thought it was because grammar school students were becoming aware of the high academic standards and their narrowing specialization. At the end of June 1920, Superintendent Barbour resigned as Superintendent of The Woodward Institute. Thus ended the operation of The Woodward School by the City of Quincy. Horace Rice was made Superintendent of the school and maintained his role as Principal. Once again the voice of the "on site" administrator was heard. "To develop this feeling of power to promote the desire to personally overcome the difficulties of a subject, to substitute the desire to work in place of a desire for amusement is the greatest service we can render to our pupils."

In June of 1923, Horace Rice resigned after 13 years as Principal and three years as Superintendent. He was replace by the 32 year old William C. Carlson. Although he only served three years, he had significant impact on the future of The Woodward Institute. He worked to restore Woodward to a college preparatory school. In the spring of 1926, he abolished the commercial department. The head and key teacher in this department was Charlotte Burgess. She had been at Woodward for 32 years. The school became a three year academic preparatory school. These were not easy decisions to make. Futhermore, while this was transpiring, the City Council and the Mayor recommended that Woodward close for one or two years. The Board of Directors rejected their recommendation and decided to approach the public to raise $20,000 to tide the school over. Carlson urged the Directors to adopt their own $16,000 budget. The Board also established a committee to investigate The Woodward Fund. They were not well received by The Board of Managers.

The writer believes that the recommendation to close Woodward was because a new high school opened in 1924 and the City no longer had use for Woodward Institute. The school was considering tuition charges and The Great and General Court of The Commonwealth of Massachusetts introduced bill 864 to allow Quincy to make an annual appropriation to aid The Woodward Institute. It appears it did not pass. William Carlson was reelected Principal in June of 1926. In July he hired a young Latin/English teacher by the name of Katherine Bacon. Carlson stated that she might make a good dean. On October 13, 1926, Carlson resigned and Miss Bacon was named Principal. The era of the public school had finally ended. A young woman with an independent school background began an incredible 43 year journey.

The Evolution of an Independent School 1926-1949

During the first 23 years of Katherine Bacon's tenure many of the familiar benchmarks that characterize independent schools began to appear. After a quarter of a century of public school influence, The Woodward Institute like a tall ship began to slowly turn about. It was a slow and deliberate maneuver under the able stewardship of Miss Bacon. The enrollment during these years vacillated between 30 and 110. Miss Bacon's first few years were extremely difficult and the thirties were not that easy either. The first entrance exam was put in place for the 1937 year. This is most interesting because 58 new students entered that year.

Many changes took place in the life of the school during these years. Although Miss Bacon had a deep and abiding faith and talked consistently about divine providence most of her reports were of a practical nature and her philosophical perspective was not often reflected upon. However, in her report of October 9, 1934 to The Board of Directors she wrote: "We feel that in so far as is practical, the school program should be molded to fit the needs of the individual child, rather than that the child should be forced to conform to a rigid schedule regardless of inclination and purpose". The Woodward School has been articulating this position ever since!

A few critical curriculum changes took place. Chemistry was restored and Latin was no longer a required subject. A suggestion was made in 1934 that the name of the school be changed to "The Woodward School for Girls". It was after all only a suggestion that didn't happen until over a quarter of a century later. Student Government was established in 1943. National Honor Society was established in 1944. Woodward became a member of The New England Association of Schools and Colleges in 1945. Miss Bacon began chapel during the same year and it was held from 8:15-8:30 with "K.B." in charge. The fall of 1946 brought 12 eighth grade students. The last time there was an eighth grade was in 1904. The seventh grade arrived in 1948. The structures were methodically placed.

The faculty turned over at a rather rapid pace. However, a few continued their love relationship with the not always kind mistress known as The Woodward Institute for Girls. A gym teacher suffered from the "grippe" one winter and would not return unless they put heat in the gym. They complied and she returned. Several alumnae have taught at Woodward and space and time prevents this writer from exploring the issue in any depth.

The approaching of World War II was not without notice. In 1934 Kay Bacon wrote in her report: "You may be relieved to know that no Bolshevism, Fascism, Hitlerism nor other subversive doctrine will be taught in this school this year, since the teaching force has subscribed to the teachers oath, in a body has sworn fealty to the constitution . . . " This writer suspects The Board wasn't anxious about the issue. (undocumented) A few teachers and several graduates were in uniform during the war. Meanwhile at Woodward Institute the school day was lengthened through December in order that the school could be closed in January to save fuel. The students also engaged in all war effort projects appropriate for high school students.

When Katherine Bacon took the reins in 1926 there were continuing deficits. In 1930, there was a $2800 deficit and the school was threatened by a loss of $4600 in income due to more bad mortgages negotiated by The Board of Managers. Three rooms were rented to the Health Department. This was a hint of more interesting issues to come. Rumors of the closing of The Woodward Institute ran wild. The Board of Directors placed a positive article in the "Ledger" talking about a $5000 surplus. Nevertheless two City Councilors suggested the school be incorporated into The Quincy Public Schools. And where have we just been since 1901?

Miss Bacon continued her threefold campaign of economizing, advertising wisely and campaigning for additional endowment. These pleas did not go unheeded. In 1942, The Donors Fund was established by generous alumnae of the school. Today that fund is worth in excess of $60,000 and its existence has helped the school considerably. In 1945, a "work study" scholarship program was available to students who needed help. They worked for the school at a rate of $.40 per hour. The Woodward Associates were organized in 1947. These were Woodward fathers and they pledged to raise $5,000. And they did!

An important word about the alumnae. The first meeting of Woodward graduates took place prior to the turn of the century. There have always been meetings, reunions, organizational structures, publications and fund raising efforts. During the forties, Eva Phillips Boyd '99 was President of The Woodward Alumnae Association and editor of a publication entitled "The Woodward World". This publication dated May, 1952 states: "No gift or pledge is too small to be appreciated, none too large to be handled". So be it!

"Do Results Count?" 1950-1969

The last half of Miss Bacon's immense journey produced additional decisions that aided in developing the structures surrounding the school. The enrollment vacillated between 63 and 101 students during these twenty years. The variation in these years however had a more serious impact because the school was charging tuition and 10 or 20 students represented a substantial percentage of the total income. These years also saw considerable cooperation from the Superintendent of School's as well as City Officials.

In June of 1952, Dr. William C. Carlson, President of Mt. Ida Junior College, and former head of The Woodward Institute, spoke at graduation and established a $500 scholarship for a graduating student planning to attend Mt. Ida. The 1954 graduation speaker was Erwin Canham, editor of "The Christian Science Monitor" and 1957 saw the two parents clubs amalgamate. The school continued as a strong college preparatory school with many extra curricular activities and programs.

The faculty continued to maintain their level of commitment and salaries. Their commitment was high. The Board of Directors asked The Board of Managers to raise salaries and establish "hospitalization" for the staff. In 1951, a testimonial was held for Katherine Bacon (25 years of service) and Georgiana Cushing Lane (55 years of service). Katherine Bacon had a gastric ulcer removed and stated that she looked forward to a happier life than she had known in four years. Antacids are a common commodity for Woodward administrators.

At the beginning of the 50's the Boards began to meet together. The City manager, William Deegan, indicated that the school faced two major problems-the care of the building and salaries and benefits. At a meeting in January 1952 a motion was made that girls not born in Quincy be admitted to Woodward. The motion was tabled. The Boards invited alumnae and parents to meet with them. These meetings were an important historic step in the right direction.

Although there was significant progress in the financial matters, 1950 showed a deficit. Once again the question of using The Adams Temple and School Fund and The Charles Francis Adams Fund was raised. The tuition edged up to $200 by 1952. The next year (1953) permission to use The Adams Temple and School Fund and The Charles Francis Adams Fund was granted by the court. Miss Bacon credited this coup to William C. Edwards, Clerk of The Board of Supervisors of The Adams Temple and School Fund. The Alumnae Annual Giving program was initiated in 1959 and tuition went to $300 the next year.

The question of non-Quincy born girls was raised again and the 1965 budget was $23,438.10. Three veteran teachers salaries were raised $1,000. Kay Bacon's salary went to $6,000. The school expenses rose to $43,500 the next year and tuition went up to $400. The financial issues always remained elusive. A head on resolution of the question remains unsolved.

In 1960, the school was re-accredited. However, it was probationary because of low salaries and the physical facilities. A year before Kay Bacon retired she proposed appointing Ruth Hurlbert as Principal and Cindra Tattrie as Assistant. This plan didn't quite get implemented.

Fear and Fascination 1969-1994

When Katherine Bacon retired in 1969 it was assumed that The Woodward School would be retired as well. It almost was retired! Due to accidental meetings and people attending meetings accidentally the school was kept on the track. There appeared to be no one who would take the reigns. Louise Hey Randall '42 ran into Cindra Tattrie, a teacher at Woodward, in the supermarket. She asked her if she was interested. Mrs. Tattrie said yes! Mrs. Randall convinced The Boards to reverse their decision to close the school. Once again the announcement of the death of The Woodward School was premature. "Strong to Live" comes back to cause us to wonder how many lives this institution has left to expend. Cindra Tattrie served for three years and interested a lot of city officials in the fate of Woodward. This would become increasingly important.

On May 24, 1969, in The Patriot Ledger, a curious article appeared. It was an article based on interviews with Woodward students as well as students from Fontbonne Academy. The report indicated that all the girls seemed to agree that boys were a distraction at any age. Woodward girls were quoted as saying: "We don't miss them at all; it's not as easy to steal another girl's boyfriend; we have more time to study; there is more freedom for discussion and less distraction; we're more feminine than other girls". This was a timely article as many of the independent girls schools had become co-educational during the sixties and seventies. Instinctively people knew that single sex education for girls was important and perhaps necessary.

The research of the past few years has proven that single sex education for girls makes a significant difference in their lives. On February 12, 1992, The American Association of University Women (AAUW) released its second national report on the status of girls and education in the United States. The following outlines the issue in a co-educational setting:

- Teachers pay less attention to girls than boys.
- Sexual harassment of girls by boys is increasing.
- Girls are closing the gap in math, but not in science.
- The Curriculum commonly ignores or stereotypes females.
- Teachers are more likely to ignore black girls, even when they make a greater effort than white classmates to catch their attention.

The coalition of Girls Schools in a survey of 1200 graduates found that they were successful, confident, and independent and involved in their community. They also had greater self-confidence and ambition than girls who attended co-educational institutions. On the contrary, these girls were more hesitant to voice their opinions and more likely to doubt their intelligence. So the Woodward girls of this era knew then what the world knows now.

In the spring of 1970, a monumental court decision made it possible for girls (or for that matter anyone) not born in Quincy to attend Woodward. It was clear as early as the 1920's that the City of Quincy might not be able to support an independent girls school that charged tuition. This decision made it clear that if a student not Quincy born wished to attend Woodward in order to keep the school operating, and therefore fulfill the wishes of the donor, then so be it. This litigation was handled by Attorney Ruth Marshall Paven, (a Woodward graduate). Students not born in Quincy were ordered by the court to pay a higher tuition. This decision looms even more significant as one realizes that in 1994, 41% of the student body are even Quincy residents.

During the seventies The Board of Supervisors continued to actively manage The Woodward School. During these years an interesting experiment took place. The two boards temporarily delegated their authority to an Executive Committee. In addition to the members of the two boards it also had parents and alumnae as members. The Supervisors and Managers met annually to ratify the actions of the Executive Committee. Although this committee was not sanctioned by the courts it underscored the need for a broader based management structure.

During the 70's the tuition averaged about $1000 and the enrollment fluctuated between 60 and 90 girls. The budgets were in the range of $110,000 to $120,000. Small deficits were a way of life.

Dr. Richard K. Chrystal of The Quincy Public Schools was engaged to evaluate the practices and procedures of The Woodward School. He recommended the establishment of an advisory board including board members, parents, staff and students to produce a document stating the philosophy of the school. He then went on to undertake a needs assessment including staff needs, plant needs and learning material needs. A mission statement would then be prepared by Dr. Chrystal including objectives for a five year period. This task was long overdue.

In the fall of 1976, Eunice Gilford wrote a memorandum to The Board of Supervisors, She decided to articulate the changes that took place in the first four years of her administration. Here is a summary of those accomplishments.

- Enrollment from 61 to 79.
- The teaching staff is qualified, experienced, interesting, committed and cooperate fully with each other and the administration.
- There have been three raises in four years.
- The school now has complete and accurate financial, student and general school records.
- The curriculum has been enriched by several new curses including German I, French V, Spanish V, ancient history and speed reading.
- The image of Woodward girls has been improved in the community.
- Extracurricular activities have been enhanced.
- Six after school clubs are now offered.
- $7,300 was expended on equipment and furniture and $5,000 was spent on renovations.
- A Mothers' Club was established.
- Communication is excellent.

Within one year Mrs. Gilford announced her retirement.

When Eunice Gilford resigned a search committee was established, a candidate was agreed upon but he chose not to serve. Robert L. Johnston, of Quincy, had just concluded his service as President of The Leland Powers School of Radio, Television and Theatre. Although he did not formally apply, and had no previous secondary school experience, he as asked to serve, he accepted and arrived at the columns on July 1, 1979. His daughter had graduated from Woodward the year before and he was familiar with the school. He also knew a few of the supervisors and managers. Initially this made the task more comfortable and productive.

The two Boards met together in July of 1979, and several issues were raised. It was stated that specific guidelines regarding the work of each board and their relationship with each other should be clarified. It was suggested The Boards should meet together on a regular basis. Finally, it was noted that a firm statement of policy was needed. It was stated by Mr. Johnston that the school years ago had agreed to allow the City to use the land to the rear of the Health Center for parking. The City in return agreed to repair the tennis courts, repair the retaining wall on the south side of the building and plant shrubs to somewhat conceal the parking area. He noted this had not even been started. Through continued dialogue and discussion this was finally consummated several years later.

As the year progressed accreditation, the Gilson property, an insurance program, pensions, salaries and building needs dominated the discussions and decisions:

- The auditorium became a combination gymnasium/auditorium.
- The budget was projected around $132,000.

- Enrollment was projected at 109.
- Tuition was $1,200 for Quincy born girls.
- The city at this time was paying $40,000 per annum to support the school. During the next five years this was phased out and the school became financially independent.

The school was reaccredited by The New England Association of Schools and Colleges in December 1980. The accreditation had been lost in 1970. This pointed to an important and significant moment in the school's history.

In 1982, the sixth grade was brought back. The last time sixth graders roamed the Woodward halls was 88 years ago. They only stayed for eight weeks and were not invited back until 1982. The hot lunch program was reestablished, a science and computer committee was established, a new all women's Board of Trustees was established, the school celebrated Katherine Bacon's 90th birthday, a new fire alarm and security system were installed, the payroll was moved from City Hall to the school, the school hired its own custodian, and the school assumed responsibility for its own rubbish and snow removal. Income was up from $117,412 in 1979 to $326,425. The Forefront in Education fund raiser was initiated and a long range planning report was completed by the Board of Trustees. The years from 1983 to 1986 brought some interesting happenings:

- The enrollment soared to 148 with 62% from Quincy.
- The budget rose to $488,274.
- The Forefront in Education program reached $17,600.
- The gala at the school raised $21,000.
- The 90th anniversary was celebrated with a parade through Qunicy Square/
- The Board of Supervisors was incorporated
- Three department coordinators were appointed.
- The tuition of Quincy born girls was $1,850.
- The Gilson Road property was sold and proceeds were used to install a new heating system in the school.
- Permission from the city was granted to move the art department to the Health Center. (It didn't happen until the fall of 1993).
- The tennis courts were renovated.
- In the previous five years $300,000 was spent in the maintenance of the building.
- A $50,000 line of credit was put in place.
- It was voted to incorporate the school.
- The Woodward School For Girls Foundation, Inc. was established and received a 501c3 from the IRS.

As a result of the decision of The Board of Supervisors to secure a $50,000 line of credit, The Board of Managers became concerned about their role as well as the city's liability. During the 1984-85 school year, The Board of Managers issued a 13 point document stating their responsibilities and authority. They stated that they were responsible for the administration of the school except for the clause of the will which gives The Board of Supervisors responsibility for the academic program. They reserved the right to hire and fire all personnel except faculty. The Board reserved the right to review and amend the budget. They also stated that all funds were to be placed in bank accounts under the control of the City Treasurer.

The Supervisors decided on the following course of action:

- To ask the City for a break down of the principal and income from The Woodward Fund, The Adams Temple and School Fund and The Charles Francis Adams Fund.
- To prepare a lease for the parking lot on school property in the amount of $10,000 per year.
- To seek a determination of the amount of money due the funds because of past mismanagement and to ask that a certain amount per year be refunded and placed back into the funds.
- To ask the City for a statement of accounting from 1869 to the present.

The stage was now set for a long drawn out court case. The City proposed action on May 13, 1986. The Supervisors attempted to get a joint meeting to resolve the issue outside of court.

On November 21, 1986, Mr. Johnston sent a two page memorandum to The Board of Supervisors Under the Will of Ebenezer Woodward. In the last paragraph he wrote: "Lastly, it appears we are finally being brought to court by The Board of Manager (sic). The Board of Managers, which manage The Woodward Fund and the management and control of all other funds raised for the school by claiming the right to approve, disapprove or amend the usual budget drawn up by and for the school by its Board of Supervisors. It is apparently seeking confirmation of that position from the court".

In the fall of 1987, The Board of Supervisors produced a document entitled the "powers and responsibilities of Supervisors". This was the counter point to the document prepared by The Board of Managers. There would be occasional court appearances during the next few years. The City would claim it didn't need to account for its management of The Woodward Fund. Eventually the court declared it must. The maneuvering continued for some years before settlement was reached.

Internally the school budget was in excess of half a million dollars. The tuition rose to around $3,000 and a fundraiser was hired. Meanwhile the Foundation was working to secure a $150,000 loan secured by personal signatures. A tuition collection policy was established. Decreasing enrollment and increasing expenses began to create a crisis.

Space makes it difficult to give either proper credit or blame for the events of the past five years. Some things appear crystal clear while others may take decades to get a proper perspective on the ways in which history revealed itself to different players and groups of players. The tension that existed between the Boards was disabling and took everyone's energy and focus from the task of running the school. The Foundation borrowed $150,000 and returned $125,000 to the bank. This made the resolution of difficult financial problems near to impossible. The Foundation was dissolved and re-established.

Mr. Johnston resigned in February of 1989, although he did continue to serve as an officer on The Board of Directors of The Woodward School for Girls Foundation, Inc. He also served as Chairman of the Capital Campaign.

A Search Committee was formed and Marshall B. Litchfield, the long time Principal at Thayer Academy, was elected the new Head of The Woodward School. Mr. Litchfield brought classroom and administrative experience to the position of Head. For the past seventeen years this position was filled by people who came from ranks of college administrators. He was immediately faced with the twin evils of dropping enrollment and escalating costs. The court case was still pending although the new administration began to thaw out the cold if not frozen players.

Due to the efforts of Mayor James Sheets, Chairman of the Board of Managers and Dr. Sheldon Bennett, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, the court case was finally settled. Some, maybe a lot, of people may be disappointed in the $400,000 settlement. Yet, three issues were perfectly clear.

1. The school needed cash to survive and immediate crisis.
2. The City realized its culpability and made a wise choice in the best interest of Quincy's taxpayers.
3. The elimnation of The Board of Supervisors and Managers and the establishment of a legitimate, independent Board of Trustees was long overdue and absolutely necessary for the future of The Woodward School for Girls.

December 16th of 1991 was the first meeting of the proposed Board of Trustees, which included a broad range of personalities, talents and abilities. Those assembled began to see the possibilities for the future. At the April meeting of the new Board of Trustees the probate court had given approval and the new management ship was launched. It wasn't a perfect vehicle but it was an independent entity with the capacity to change if necessary and adapt to new situations without additional red tape. There have been and will continue to be struggles. The future is now solely in the hands of one board and the possibilities are filled with fascination as well as fear.

Mr. Litchfield resigned in June of 1992, and Mr. Johnston, who was then serving as Chairman of The Board of Trustees, was appointed interim Head of the School. In the spring of 1993, he was appointed permanent Head. The enrollment has gone from 67 to around 90 or so students for the past two years. The Board of Trustees continues to battle with Cervantes windmills. These windmills are as old as the school. Enrollment and financial stability are yet to be resolved. The Board is resolved to do just that!

From the Board of Supervisors:

As Directors of the former Board of Supervisors, we are proud to send these greetings to The Woodward School for Girls on this great occasion of its 100th anniversary.

Not only is The Woodward School celebrating a century of offering the young women of Quincy and neighboring communities a fine and unique educational opportunity, the School is also marking the important beginning of a new phase in its distinguished history. The School is now well on its way under the governance of a newly created single Board of Trustees.

One hundred twenty-five years ago, in 1869, Dr. Ebenezer Woodward and his wife Mary Greenleaf Woodward provided that their estate go to the establishment and support of a school for the education of young women in the arts and sciences, just as President John Adams had established the Adams Academy for young men. Land gradually was sold to provide funds needed for building, and The Woodward School opened for classes in 1894.

Following the model of the Adams Academy, Dr. Woodward provided that the governance be divided between two separate Boards. The officers of the then Town of Quincy were to serve as the Board of Managers, with responsibility as trustee for the land and investments left by the Woodwards for the benefit of the School. The clergy of the Town were to serve as the Board of Supervisors, with the Minister of United First Parish Church as Chairman. The Board of Supervisors were to be responsible for the academic program, staff and operation of the School.

While this model of governance may have made sense in 1869 and at times did serve the School well, as years passed it became clear that a new system of leadership was needed, in a form appropriate for a modern school about to enter the 21st century. In 1992, after many discussions and a difficult legal process, the two original Boards were able to resign and turn their respective powers over to one, independent Board of Trustees, which now has full power and responsibility.

For a century now, The Woodward School has provided many hundreds of young women a fine education. The School has also contributed richly to the historical heritage and cultural life of our community. By offering a supportive as well as a challenging learning environment with small classes, The Woodward School continues to offer young women an opportunity to develop their talents and abilities to become effective leaders in whatever career they later follow.

As Directors of the former Board of Supervisors, we are proud of the leadership and guidance we were able to provide The Woodward School over the course of its first century. We extend these greetings and offer our best wishes for School's second one hundred years.

The Directors of the Board of Supervisors, as of January 23, 1992, our final meeting.

City of Quincy

The City of Quincy has had a continuous existence since 1625. It began as Mr. Wollaston when it was annexed to Boston in 1634. The residents, in 1640, petitioned the Great and General Court to incorporate as Braintree, the 22nd town of Massachusetts. At that time, Braintree would extend from the middle part of Wollaston today through the town of Braintree and include the towns of Randolph and Holbrook.

The present City of Quincy was the North Precinct of Braintree while North Quincy remained part of Dorchester. In 1789, native son, John Adams, was elected the first Vice-President of the United States and would be elected the second President eight years later. Local consciousness was brought to a high pitch by this election, so Quincy citizens asserted their right to an individual existence. They incorporated as "Quincy" in honor of Colonel John Quincy the maternal grandfather of Abigail Adams. He was an eminent citizen of his day, respected for his honesty and integrity. He died on July 13, 1767, two days after birth of his great-grandson John Quincy Adams. Our sixth President was named in his honor.

Quincy has an unusually rich and diverse historical heritage. A great part of this heritage is the diversity of the economic life of the area. The Quincy area was the site of the first manufacturing enterprise-a commercial iron furnace. The area continued with a progression of other manufacturing enterprises: the glass works, shoe factories, fish industries, salt works and other mills. Although Quincy was originally an agricultural community, much like its neighboring towns, agriculture gave up its prominent role in the community as industry began to take over as the primary employer of Quincy's citizens. The shipbuilding industry began with the first ship in 1696. It was the second most prominent employer in the City. It began as a little shop on the Braintree Fore River, experimenting with the potential capabilities of marine engines. By 1884, the business had grown so that it was forced to move to nearby Quincy Fore River. Eventually it would become the powerful Bethlehem Steel and finally General Dynamics. The second best known and influential industry was granite quarrying. When King's Chapel in Boston used Quincy granite, the demand for Quincy granite began to exceed the expected supply. At one time over 30 quarries were operating. Granite from the Mt. Arrarat Quarry, owned by John Adams was used to build the first Parish Church which now houses the crypts of John and Abigail Adams and John Quincy and Louisa Catherine Adams. John Adams gift to the City of Quincy, the Temple and School Fund, not only provided for the church, but for a school for boys, Adams Academy opening in 1872. John's physician and relative, Ebenezer Woodward provided for a school for girls, opening in 1894.

In 1894 . . .

Adams Academy was operating as a boys school.
The Woodward Institute had opened for girls.
The Public High School was on Coddington Street.
The Quincy Historical Society was holding its first public meeting in the Crane Library.
Charles Francis Adams II had moved to Lincoln but Brooks Adams of the fourth generation still summered at the Old House (The Adams Mansion).

The rehabilitation of the John Quincy Adams birthplace had begun.
Quincy Hospital was operating and able to aid the injured people from a terrible wreck on the Old Colony Railroad.
Colonel Francis Parker become the first superintendent of Quincy Public Schools and set the Quincy System based on experience he had witnessed in Germany.
Town Government had become the reformed Town Meeting based on business discipline.
The debt of $112,000 was reduced to $9000 and finally eliminated.
The Quincy & Boston Railway was operating street cars and Hough's Neck was used as a summer resort.
Quincy Theatre was on Hancock Street and Billy de Wolfe was a vaudevillian who played there. Years later a Hollywood actor by the name of Billy Jones would take the stage name, Billy de Wolfe.
The Quincy Colosseum was on Depot St. behind the Railway near Newport Ave. There were nickelodeons and dioramas displayed there.
The Fore River Engine Co. existed.
The Crane Library was operating for ten years.
The City of Quincy was quiet with tree-lined streets, convenient shopping areas, and business areas. Its people were hard-working and active in civic and religious organizations.
By this time there were other religious denominations coming to Quincy: Christ Church (the oldest Episcopal parish in Massachusetts), Catholic Churches, Evangelical Congregation formed, the first Methodist Society built a church and the beginnings of Jewish congregations.
The Patriot had merged with the Ledger and became the Patriot Ledger.

In 1894, Eastern Nazarene College, Quincy College, Dunkin Donuts, Howard Johnson, Grossman's, synagogues, Islamic Centers, Bethlehem Steel, Home Depot, State Street South, Quincy Symphony Orchestra or Marina Bay did not exist.

Few places can compare with Quincy for its historical heritage. This centennial year of The Woodward School reminds us to reflect on our past. Quincy has so much to offer it people and our whole nation. The National Park Service has as its mission the role to preserve and protect what has been handed down from one generation to another. We should use these treasures to teach future generations our national heritage.

"Behind every city there is a story which is woven into a patterned fabric from the threads of its people's lives.

In Quincy we can see around us, every day, history written in subtle and lasting designs . . . . "

Quincy History was excerpted from a speech given by Agnes Smith, National Park Service Ranger at The Woodward School Alumnae Reunion Banquet, May of 1993.

From the City of Quincy:

On behalf of all the citizens of the City of Quincy, "City of Presidents", it is my pleasure to extend sincere congratulations to the students, alumnae, family and friends, the Board of Supervisors and Board of Trustees of The Woodward School, on this, the one hundredth anniversary of this great school.

During these one hundred years young women received an education in arts and sciences and prepared them for future education in various colleges and universities, through the auspices of Dr. Ebenezer Woodward and his wife, Mary (Greenleaf). Dr. Woodward and his wife saw to it that their estate established a school which would provide for young women in the same way that President John Adams provided for young men.

Throughout the past century hundreds of young women have benefited from the excellent curriculum offered and presented by the excellent faculty members.

It is my personal hope that future generations will continue to enjoy the well-rounded education offered at The Woodward School for another hundred years and more.

James A. Sheets, Mayor
City of Quincy

THE "WOODWARD FUND."

We take pleasure in presenting to our readers and the town, a copy of an important instrument, recently executed for the advantage of the town, by Mrs. Woodward, the widow of the late Dr. Woodward, because it tends to disprove certain libelous reports, which were freely circulated at the time the bequest was before the town for acceptance, and demonstrates that this excellent woman has but one desire and purpose in this matter, that of voluntarily co-operating with her late husband in his noble design, for the benefit of the future young women of Quincy. It will also remove from the public mind that indefinite idea of doubt and uncertainty, which, by persistent effort, was made to appear to attach to the title of the real estate, devised, and by means of which our citizens were for a time placed in a position, false to their inclinations and their interests, and ungrateful to their generous benefactor.

Founder's Night

"The name of Woodward meant little to us during the first months of our life here at school, but before March of our Freshman year, we learned that a country doctor by the name of Ebenezer Woodward, who died in 1869 had given a large part of his property to the town for the establishment of a school for Quincy-born girls. Preparations were made for the celebration of his birthday, known as Founder's Day which has become a yearly event.

So let's honor Ebenezer
Who so many years ago
Left a fund that gave to Quincy
Woodward School, as we all know.

Let us honor too, our teachers,
Who have taught us through the years,
They have borne our pranks and failures,
Soothing all our doubts and fears.

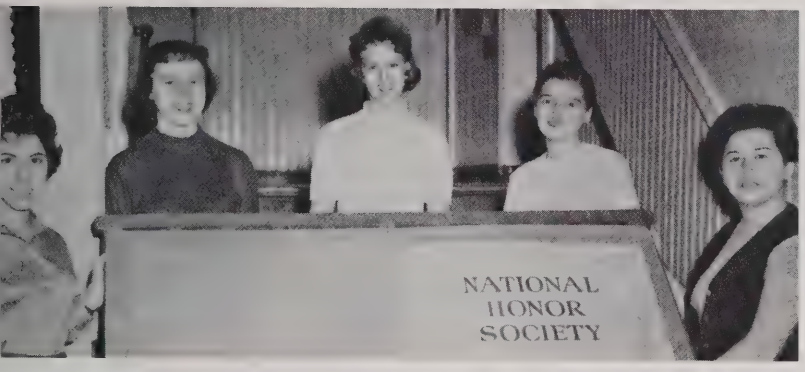
To another friend and helper
Of the girls and teachers too
Good dear "Mac" who's ever ready
Let's give him honor due.

For our classmates, we shall ever
Cherish memories of the days
That we spent in dear Old Woodward

And her worth we'll ever praise."

National Honor Society

The first induction of the Katherine Bacon Chapter of the National Honor Society at Woodward - 1945.



On the occasion of Katherine Bacon's 90th birthday, at a party given in her honor, The Katherine Bacon Scholar Award was established. It is given each year on Founder's Night to a sixth grader who demonstrates early on the qualities of the National Honor Society, scholarship, leadership, character and service.

Science Fair

The Science Fair is a Founder's Night tradition. Whether just the Seniors and Juniors or the entire entire school participate, it is centainly an event that honors Dr. Woodward's interest and commitment to science. Researching the topic, writing the paper, preparing the exhibit and finally presenting the finished project to the "public" on Founder's Night is an enormous task and a great experience for the student. Over the years there have been volcanos erupting, chickens hatching and even a helicopter built that could fly-what excitement!

The Patriot Ledger began to sponsor a Spelling Bee for middle school students during the 1980's. Woodward winners were honored at Founder's Night. One Woodward winner won the regional competition and went on to the National Spelldown held in Washington D.C.

Satisfaction Greatest Reward For Recreation Instructors

If the satisfaction of helping people could be put into financial terms, Carolyn Zoia would be wealthy.

Carolyn, who lives at 43 North Central Avenue, Quincy, is a senior at the University of Massachusetts School of recreation leadership

She is completing her field work requirement with the Quincy Recreation Commission. She is not new to the commission: she has been a park instructor for two summers.

Her duties are varied and exhaustive, but she feels that is of value to her in the future of recreation field.

Her hours are 9:30 to 5:30. She is in the office in the morning and travels to the 18 youth centers sponsored by the commission in the afternoon.

She has completed a booklet on arts and crafts for the commission's use. She has also put together a booklet on games that also will be used in the Quincy Recreation Department's youth centers. She is conducting a class on modern dance and fundamental of rhythms.

The recreation field is not a lucrative one, to be sure, but that is not the most important thing in Carolyn's mind.

"There are some good paying jobs in recreation, but I am in it because recreation is a growing thing and I want to be in it while it is growing," said Carolyn. "This field work I am doing has given me a better chance to see what I really want to do in recreation.

"If I had a choice between being in administration or working directly with the youth or people, I would take the latter.

"You get a great deal of self-satisfaction from this type of work. I don't know anybody who are football players. "I have always been a sports fan, especially a football fan. My father's life is sports as well as my mother's.

"When I was about four, my father (Nick) had a semi-pro football team in Quincy and a semi pro wrestling organization. I can scarcely remember it."

Carolyn realizes there is a big problem in recreation today

"The problem is the people themselves," she said. "They don't realize there is a great deal of importance in recreation today. It is an important part of the well-being of every person."

With the talk of less and less hours in a work week, people have more and more spare time. That leaves the field of recreation with a big job.

Bill Ryan, director of the Quincy Recreation Commission said there were 4,000 jobs open in recreation last year with only 400 graduating recreation leaders to fill them.

Carolyn has some opinions about different phases in recreation. "I feel that a big part of a recreation commission's duties should be aimed in the elderly citizens' direction. Quincy has a fine program in the area. I shall be in it in a few weeks

"As far as young children go they are enthusiastic about the varied activities put on each day by the commission.

"They are used to playing only four or five games all kids play when they are among themselves, but when they attend the youth center, they are taught diversified activities. That is important in the developing of a child's character."

Ryan has a great deal of respect for the modest but ambitious young leader. He sees in her the symbol of a new career in a new field.

There are many schools throughout the country that have seen the need for courses in this type of career. Springfield College leads the country in that course.

Science teacher inspires Woodward students

By Ray McEachern
The Patriot Ledger

QUINCY — Tomorrow's graduating seniors at Woodward School for Girls have dedicated their 1989 yearbook in honor of James Pickel, a softspoken science teacher who makes a strong impression on his students.

Pickel, who joined Woodward four years ago after retiring from a job in industry, blends courses in math and science with practical lessons such as how to repair a television.

Students say Pickel and other teachers nurture a kind of "Woodward pride" — fortifying graduates with confidence as well as competence when they leave their one-building campus in Quincy Center.

Just ask senior Kerri Pelletier, yearbook editor and class valedictorian; Kristin MacDonald, class president, or Carrie Card, class vice president. The three talked about teachers and school life in an interview this week with The Patriot Ledger.

"Mr. Pickel was always there for us," said Card, niece of White House aide Andrew W. Card Jr., who will be keynote speaker at graduation. She said the teacher, an MIT graduate, "would tell us how a TV worked — not to teach us math — but because we should know."

Pelletier noted that Pickel, a Braintree resident who once taught at Washington University in St. Louis, Mo., d... class of seven physics students ... his year so they could atten... Harvard University.

Woodward School names all-female trustees board

QUINCY — The Woodward School for Girls, a private girls school founded in 1884, has established a 15-member, all-female board of trustees.

According to school officials, it's the first all-women board of trustees in the country.

The new board will help raise money and make the community more aware of the school, said Robert L. Johnson, the school's headmaster.

"As far as we know, this is the first time that a girls' school has had a board of trustees made up of women," Johnson said.

Sandra Dennis of Quincy was elected the board's president at an organizational meeting last week.

Financial decisions for the school will still be made by the board of managers while the board of trustees will work in the curriculum area.

"One of the goals at Woodward is to foster the qualities of leadership among young women," Johnson said. "In order to demonstrate this role of women in our society, we felt it was appropriate to pioneer the idea of an all-women board."

Woodward was established by a Quincy physician, Dr. Ebenezer Woodward, in 1894. He left a bequest so the school could offer a college preparatory program for grades seven through 12.

Under the terms of Woodward's will, the school was to be open only to young women born in Quincy. When the school ran into financial difficulties in the 1960s, city officials went to court to allow students born outside Quincy to also attend the school under a dual tuition plan.

Today, the school has 70 students from Quincy, and the remaining 42 are from all over the South Shore as well as Boston.

In December 1980 Woodward School regained its accreditation from the New England Association of Schools and Colleges. It had lost its accreditation 11 years earlier.

Tuition at Woodward is now $1,550 for Quincy-born students, $1,700 for Quincy residents and $1,800 for non-Quincy residents

Named to the new board of trustees were Joyce Baker, Alicia Coletti, Jean Fain, Bernice Mader, Marcia O'Connell, Ruth Paven, Louise Randall, and Miriam Sherburne, all from Quincy; Concetta Kelley, treasurer, and Helen Tragellis, both of Milton; State Rep. Elizabeth Metayer and Anita Dickinson of Braintree; Blossom Glassman of Randolph, vice president.

90th anniversary ball for Woodward School

$10,000 expected in major annual fund-raiser

By Maurice F. Reardon
Patriot Ledger Staff

QUINCY — The bang of hammers and the rasp of saws filled the gymnasium at Woodward School for Girls yesterday as preparations for tonight's gala ball marking the 90th anniversary of the school's founding were completed.

The Woodward School came into being as the result of provision made in the will of Dr. Ebenezer Woodward of Quincy, who died in May of 1869.

In his will, Woodward left property to the City to be used for the establishment of a "female institute." It was not until 1894 that the first class of 78 Quincy-born girls attended lectures in the wooden building on Hancock Street.

Members of the all-female board of trustees of Woodward yesterday donned jeans and sweatshirts to prepare for tonight's ball by fabricating and erecting the decorations to turn the school into a fantasy setting for the celebration, expected to be attended by several hundred people.

Headmaster Robert Johnston was a sort of working foreman and from the top of a stepladder was making adjustments in the decorations.

It is expected that the ball, a major fund-raising event sponsored by the Friends of Woodward, will raise some $10,000 for educational services for the school.

Trustee Joyce Baker is chairman of the ball and her co-chairman is alumna Lorraine Botteli. Both are Quincy residents.

Tonight's activities will begin with a champagne reception, with Ruby Newman's Orchestra providing the musical background.

Old movies will be the attraction at the piano bar, with mimes and magicians entertaining throughout. Black, white and silver with the glamour of the 1920's and 30's is the theme of this year's event. Several members of the committee are dressing in the fashion of that era.

Marie Sansone Volpe '48 wrote to Woodward and one of her memories was of the "Woodward fathers" who labored long and hard for the School. Over the years Woodward has been blessed with not only enthusiastic but creative and willing fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, grandparents and cousins too! There have been hobby shows, galas, haunted houses and auctions to name a few events. This spirit of sharing is especially evident each year at float building time. The success of Woodward in this competition and the happy faces in the pictures are tradition worthy of pride. Again, congratulations and thank you to all the Woodward family.

From the Editor:

Sorting through boxes and boxes of pictures, newspaper articles and memorabilia the past few months has been fun. In fact, one of Jostens' publication guide books used the phrase "serious fun" and it seemed appropriate for this project. We knew we needed to be serious about deadlines but it sure was fun going back and and remembering.

We were reminded that although Woodward has had many ups and downs, its maintained its committment to preparing young women for college as well as life. The faculty and staff have been steadfast, and they have given stability to the academic curriculum and program. Through the years Woodward has cared for its students as if they were family. An atmosphere was provided for personal nurturing, social development and academic awakening. Woodward School's purpose from its founding was to prepare young women in all areas of living; to provide a classical and practical education and individual development. When Woodward graduated its students, it gave to the world young women filled with confidence, excitment and responsibility. Young graduates said "I'd can do that!" "I'd like to try that".

On behalf of the Alumnae Association Board, I hope that you enjoy taking this trip down memory lane. We want to thank all who sent in surveys, pictures and wrote letters. If some of you recognize notes, quotes, pictures, poetry, and letters, we found the Snoops and Scoops and the annual senior yearbooks great resources. We want to thank the wide Woodward community whose support, belief and encouragement have been so important during the first hundred years. We have truly enjoyed working on this project and present it to you with love and affection, an emotion we all have for Woodward. Thank you all again, for the memories.
